Mexico City, Mexico. June 3rd, 2020. – To support those who daily take care of Mexicans' health, andatti, the coffee brand that is 100% Mexican which is sold in OXXO chain stores, joins in the protection of healthcare workers of dozens of hospitals nationwide.

With this support to the healthcare sector, andatti gives social value to its 15th anniversary and joins efforts with FEMSA Foundation, Chocolate Abuelita and Svetia, to make a donation of the equivalent of the protection to more than 16 thousand people as part of the initiative #ContagiaSolidaridad (Infect Solidarity).

“For OXXO, the generation of economic value must come along with the creation of social value. This is why, facing this crisis, we wish to show solidarity and be good neighbors with the community. Through this help to the healthcare sector, we aim to contribute to the wellbeing of society,” said Jaime Longoria Manllo, Commercial Director at OXXO.

This effort is part of the initiative #ContagiaSolidaridad, integrated by Coppel Group, FEMSA Foundation, Santander, Soriana, OXXO and Televisa Foundation. Additionally, it has the support of Solistica and ptm (Mexican Technical Plastics), both FEMSA companies, to take the protection equipment to more than 70 thousand healthcare workers across Mexico. The deliveries are programmed to start at the beginning of June.

This is a form of gratitude from andatti and OXXO to all of those people that through their job are taking care of and facilitating the wellbeing and tranquility of the citizens who must remain at home.

Likewise, the company is committed to keeping the widest availability of first need products and services, as long as the sanitary emergency allows.
